

Introduction

My design approach is holistic, taking into consideration the time of year (British Seasonality), the colour and style preferences (Aesthetic) of you (The Couple) and the suitability of the chosen types of flowers and foliage for their functions on the day (Practicality). Where possible, I like to bring in appropriate elements of the language of flowers (Floriography) so that the floral decorations for your marriage are not only beautiful, but peppered with meaning.

Process

I enjoy working collaboratively, and I want to design the best unique arrangements to suit you and your day. I appreciate that there is an enormous amount to organise and think about when planning your wedding, and often you are encountering many of these challenges for the first time. I work on one wedding at a time, so I can dedicate thought and care to making sure your flowers are perfect for the two of you.

Consultation

I begin with an initial hour-long consultation, where I talk you through ingredients that are likely to be in season around your wedding date and we determine your Aesthetic, Practical and Floriographic priorities. You do not need any knowledge of flowers for this. I am here to guide you and equipped with a lot of pictures! Just bring your own mind and willingness to respond honestly to what you see. Details that you are comfortable to share about your hopes for your day and marriage are also really helpful, but by no means compulsory. Following this, I will write a summary of our design approach for you. This is the blueprint I will use for designing your completely personal florals.

Payment

If you decide to go ahead, a booking fee of 25% of the quoted total for designs & delivery is required to secure your wedding date. This is non-refundable. Your final payment will be due 4 weeks before your wedding date. I will be in touch in the weeks running up to your wedding to update you on availability of certain ingredients and to keep you informed on any alterations offered by Mother Nature. Your final designs will connect you and your guests to nature in a way that perfectly represents the two of you on your unique wedding day.
